help support them while you are in pris-THE HAYES ADMINISTRATION. on." The man was taken aback at the ex-President's kindness to him, and I think afterwards Mrs. Hayes succeeded in having this man pardoned.

Directly after the Inauguration, when they had all returned to the White House, and those who could get in had been in and paid their respects to President and Mrs. Hayes, I picked up her wrap, and started upstairs from the Blue Parlor with her and the President. When we got upstairs I started to show them the various chambers in the house-bed-chambers, etc. After I had showed them all the bed chambers we went into the library, which is directly over the Blue Parlor. It is an oval-shaped room, the same as the Blue Parlor. We proceeded into the Cabinet Room, and I explained that to them, and from that into the President's office, and showed them the rest of the official part of the house, in the meantime introducing them to all employees who were at that time connected with the official household.

The President and Mrs. Hayes then returned to the private part of the house and rested a little while; then their friends commenced calling, and continued to arrive until 10 o'clock that night. We were all very tired when we got through.

The next day a great many delegations called on the President, and with ladies calling on Mrs. Haves, we had our hands full. When the Glee Club of Cleveland, Ohio, called, the President and Mrs. Hayes came down to receive them in the Blue Parlor. When the members had been introduced and had shaken hands with them, they stepped out into the main corridor opposite the Blue Parlor, and sang that grand old hymn, "The Sweet Bye-and-Bye." The President and Mrs. Hayes both enjoyed it very much.

Mrs. Hayes was a grand lady, and the White House will never have one to surpass her. After they got settled down and the crowds had left the city, I then had s' better opportunity of finding out the character of both of them. And the character of both was beautiful! As she would be going out to breakfast through the upper corridor of a morning how often I have heard her singing a beautiful hymn. How kind-hearted she was; always had a kind word to say to the humblest employee at the White House. Notes would come to the White House time after time from the destitute and poor, wanting help. She would have me come upstairs to see her, and would say, "Mr Pendel, here is some money, and here is a note. Take this, and find out where they live, and give it to them."

120 On one occasion, out on Massachusetts avenue, a young girl, about 22 years of the upper corridor of a morning how often avenue, a young girl, about 22 years of age, was down with consumption. Mrs. Hayes said to me, "Pendel, I want you to take these oranges up to that young lady and give them to her."

When they first came to the White was a little chap ruming around. Miss Fannie was a little girl. Webb Hayes and Burchard and the other son' (I cannot recall the name) were all older than Scott. The young people used to have a fine time. Since that time Miss Fannie has matured into womanhood and married a naval officer. I called upon her once when she was residing in the Navy Yard, and had the pleasure of looking upon the in-teresting little baby, of which she seemed to be very proud. She was very much like her mother in her disposition, being very affable and pleasant. Scott Hayes has long since matured into manhood, and is very handsome and gentlemanly in his manner. Their whole Administration was very pleasant indeed. Sometimes I would be showing strangers through the house, and would come upon Mrs. Hayes una-wares in the Red Parlor. I would almost invariably introduce these ladies and gentlemen to her, and they would go away

Crump, lost his little son. I had gone out to see him, and while I was there addressing the father, the President's carriage drove up, and Mrs. Hayes came in, saying, "Why, Mr. Pendel, how do you do?" just as friendly as though she had been one of my own sisters. After she en one of my own sisters. After she had conversed with Mr. Crump and his wife, and was about to take her depart-ure, she said: "Mr. Pendel, come out and get into the carriage, and I will take you down to the White House." I thanked her very kindly, and told her I was off duty, and was on my way home, in a different direction.

Toward the close of their Administration the callers increased. For the last two days I had never seen anything like There were more weeping people when they were about to say good-by I ever saw in the White House in all my life, and at the outgoing of their Administration and the incoming of the Garfield Administration I was so very busy that I did not have an opportunity to shake hands with either the President or Mrs. Hayes. They became the guests of Sen-ator Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, and of Mrs. Sutton. The next day I went over and had the pleasure of meeting the

"Do you ever have an opportunity to do any writing in the prison here? STEWARD CRUMP'S STORY.

The Dead President-An Interesting In cident of His Life.

Steward Crump was found late this norning, sitting in the hall at the foot of the east stairway of the White House and surrounded by nearly all of the at-taches of the White House who are now in the city. He had heard the awful news of the President's death through The Republican extra, which he had heard the boys crying on the streets, just as he was going to bed. At 2 o'clock a. m. he had received no dispatches from Mr. Brown or Col. Rockwell, but expected to do so at every minute, and intended remaining up all night. He said that the house can eward of the White House, Mr. be put in complete order for the reception of the President in a couple of hours, should the remains be brought here. The East Room is yet in complete order, and only a portion of the rooms downstairs have been cleared out. Mr. Crump was much distressed at the sad news, and said that he had had all the time the strongest faith that Gen. Garfield would get well. He said, "He was always so cheerful and had so much nerve. Why, he used to astonish me with his jokes, even while he was suffering horribly. Suffer? I should say he did. The first week or 10 days was his feet. He kept saying, 'Oh, my God! my feet feel as though there wer millions of needles being run through them.' I used to squeeze his feet and toes in both my hands, as hard as I possibly could, and that seemed the only re-lie he could get.

The day he was shot and on Sunda he kept talking all the time, but Monday he let up some, and then Tuesday morn ing the doctors shut down on his talking Sunday morning, just after the big crowd had cleared away, I was alone with the General and Dr. Bliss. The Doctor sat on one side of the bed and I on the other. on one side of the day of Dr. Bliss's Gen. Garfield had hold of Dr. Bliss's hand, and turned his head and asked me if I knew where he first saw Bliss. I told him I didn't, and he then said he would tell me. He said that when he was would tell me. He said that when he was moved up to the White House, he came moved up to the White House, he came moved up to the White House, he came over and had the pleasure of meeting the ex-President and Mrs. Hayes. That was the last time that I ever saw her. President Hayes called at the time poor Garfield was suffering at the White House from the effects of being shot, and that was the last time I ever saw him.

During President Hayes's Administration there was a newspaper man who used to slash him right and left, through the paper with which he was connected, in the hoost abusive way. The President did not know who it was at the time, but after he left the White House a commission was appointed to visit the different prisons throughout the United States. I think Mr. Hayes was the President of this commission. He visited quite a number of prisons, and sometimes would talk with the prisoners. One day while visiting some prison, I do not know where, it is not into a president was a pointed to say the president of this commission. New York, Sept. 20-12:30 a. m.—The first news of the President's death was announced at the theaters, the managers announcing briefly the sad event, and dropping the curtain upon the closing scenes of the performances at the va-rious theaters. The news was received here without special excitement on the street, though at the Fifth Avenue Hotel and other places of resort of prominent politicians, stock operators, etc., there was much comment as to the incidents of the late President's illness and the possible change of the policy and personnel of the incoming Administration. Such comment was expressive strongly of sympathy with the late President and confidence in President Arthur. It is authoritatively asserted that President Arthur will leave New York early this morning for Washington, and will reach the National Capital during the day where he will tabe. tal during the day, where he will take the oath of office as President. A train over the Pennsylvania road has been at his disposal for several days past, in antici-pation of the death of Gen. Garfield. The announcement has not been received here as yet regarding funeral arrangements. At 12:30 o'clock it is reported that Gen. Arthur will join the Cabinet of the late President at Long Branch at once.
